Reading

A Kate

At last! We've finally moved. It's been a long wait – my parents first viewed the house over six months ago, but it's taken ages for all the paperwork to go through and obviously we had to sell our old house too. The people who were planning to buy it changed their minds at the last minute which meant we couldn't sign contracts when we were supposed to. But everything's sorted out now, thank goodness, and we had all our furniture moved last weekend by a removals company. They were pretty good, but they upset Mum by dropping and breaking one of her favourite lamps! Anyway, I adore the new house, especially my own room, which is twice as big as my last one and it's got a skylight! Happy days!

B Tilda

I was absolutely dreading the move to our new flat in town because I'd got used to the old neighbourhood with all its shops and interesting characters. That's not to mention all my mates from the area. I also had some preconceptions about living in the town centre. I imagined it would be noisy and everything would be dirty from the air pollution. However, I couldn't have been more wrong. The flat's in a beautiful, modern building and because of the double glazing you can't hear any traffic noise at all. The walls are really thick too and there's no noise from the flats above or below us either. I've already made some great friends from the neighbouring flats who go to the school I'll be attending, so it won't be so bad on my first day. My room's cool too – not all my old furniture would fit in, but I can see right across the park to the river, and that makes up for it being a bit on the small side.

C Davina

Our move to the country has proved a terrific success. I have to admit that I was getting a bit fed-up with the old house. I had to share a room with my sister – which is never a good thing – and it doesn't get any easier when you're a teenager (and your sister steals your stuff and complains all the time). Now I get to have my own space and a dog too! The woods are just a minute away and I go walking with Timmy (the dog) and my mates from the village every day. Surprisingly there's quite a lot going on here too – sports clubs as well as some decent shopping areas. Also, getting to school is only a ten-minute car drive, which is a bonus seeing as my previous house was a forty-five-minute bus journey away from school!
